

1 DU has long had impressive Special Collections, and with the Ida and Max Fogel Family Reading Room, we now have an appropriate place where scholars and students may review and conduct research using these rare and valuable materials.

2 The Charles M. and Faye G. Schayer Seminar Room serves as a classroom for professors who bring students to work with primary sources. Imagine holding an important historic document or the costume of a famous dancer! The Schayer Room may also be used by archivists, historians and librarians for meetings.

3 Special Collections are climate controlled, locked and supervised. With Special Collections are offices for the University Historian, the curators of the University Archives and the Ira M. and Peryle Hayutin Beck Memorial Archives of Rocky Mountain Jewish History, and an exhibit preparation room.

4 The Penrose Collection includes all of the books and materials belonging to the University Libraries. In honor of the family that funded El Pomar Foundation, and which, in turn, provided the funds not only to build DU's former library but to make major acquisitions of important resources, we have named the collection for Spencer and Julie Penrose, the library's forty-year namesake.

5 Because compact moveable shelving provides less opportunity to sit in the stacks to browse, we offer the Collections Review Room where patrons may bring materials to review for check out.

6 In response to requests from graduate students, the Anderson Academic Commons has a Family Study Room where students may bring their children while they use the library, and the kids are comfortable with toys and kid-sized furniture while Mom or Dad studies.

7 An anonymous donor funded the Quiet Study Room where acoustic engineering limits noise from other areas of the Academic Commons and from Evans Avenue so that students may easily focus on their assignments.

8 This open reading area was funded by the estate of Marjorie Hornbein. It overlooks The Derek & Joan Carroll Family Garden, just west of the building, and visible through large windows where windows previously had not existed.

A Group study room funded by Trygve Myhren family.
